Abstract:

Linked Open Data enables an expressive formal representation of data as stories that can be extracted and re-assembled in the form of a narrative. Having these narratives interconnected would surely enrich the data itself as well as the user consumption of the information. Narratives of cultural heritage data have the potential to unfold incredible stories of humans and societies throughout time. This project will use the vast archived collections of the Netherlands Institute for Sound and Vision (NISV) as a case study to computationally produce data narratives in the form of lists/chains of entities in a meaningful way.
